Miaou! to the consternation of the beholders. When the man found he had been tricked he rushed back to the market to find Owlglass, but the latter had taken off his peasants disguise and escaped recognition. The scene of Tills next prank was laid in a university town, where there were many doctors and professors. Here Owlglass donned a college cap and gown, and caused placards to be printed in which he advertised himself as a great scholar who could solve the most difficult problems. These he nailed up in the most conspicuous places in the town. When the President of the university saw these advertisements, he called a meeting of all the professors, and consulted with them as to what problem to set before Owlglass, to test his pretensions to knowledge. After long discussion they decided to ask Till...
