L. Roehrig, who tends more to the full-Moorish lines and decoration, as Hunt more to the Spanish-Moresque. Such a residence as that of W. C. Stuart is restful to the eye weary with viewing eternal crystalizations of unreasoned precedent. So far as superior comfort and healthfulness go, there is no comparing any one of these houses with any of its frame neighbors; so far as picturesqueness and local fitness, still less. To them whose first concern in the home is that it be homelike, such a house needs only acquaintance to become inevitably beloved. As to the larger class whose chief thought of the dwelling is of how it shall impress neighbor and passer-by--well, yourself, which would you go the farther to see; any frame house in Los Angeles, or one of these artistic and unhackneyed disciples of the...
