Excerpt: . Mr. Carpenter has not turned our attention to this word. It would have scarcely served his purpose. It would have proved far too clearly that the forgiveness which the Bishop conveys the power to bestow when the priest absolves, is the doing of something, and not the declaring that something is done. Not one of the meanings of the word forgive is to declare, but in every case it is to impart the blessing; it is to pardon a person -- to pardon a crime -- not to exact a debt or penalty. Whatever obscurity, therefore, or ambiguity, might hang around the word absolve, is cleared at once by a reference to the word forgive, which the Bishop employs when he confers the prerogative of absolution. This word forgive, according to the King of Lexicographers, does not mean to declare forgiven, but to...
